» GMW and its objectives

As a society specialising on matters of media usage in universities, the Society for Media in Science (GMW) supports research and effective use of media as an integral part of research and teaching. GMW promotes testing of media supported learning scenarios and critical reflection of potentials of new media in all areas of development in universities.

» Target group of GMW

Practice and reflection of media usage in research and teaching require a high level of interdisciplinary cooperation. GMW represents an interdisciplinary and integrated specialist forum for all professionals involved in affected disciplines. Members work on media issues in didactics, psychology, development and design. For those that work in other related disciplines, GMW is an ideal second professional and scholarly association.

» GMW offers

Every year, the highlight of GMW activities is the European Conference at various venues in Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. The international conference promotes the development of media-related skills and supports innovation in universities and educational institutions. It emphasises innovative potentials of new media in reforms in universities and focuses on strategic issues.

The conference is closely linked with the annual MEDIA-PRIX, an award for outstanding media-didactic plans and developments, which was initiated, applied for, established and supported by GMW. The award of €100,000 has found wide recognition and acclaim and sets trends and directions. The award directs public attention to innovations in the application of new media in a way no other award has managed.

GMW cooperates with Waxmann publishers on the series of books called "Medien in der Wissenschaft" (Media in Science). The publications focus on design, didactic and evaluative aspects of new media and their strategic potentials for university development. Authors and editors working in these disciplines are invited to contribute to the series.
